Terrawatu has partnered up with Roots and Shoots, a project of the Jane Goodall Institute, to expand our tree planting and environmental awareness programs throughout the Arusha District.

Roots and Shoots’ mission in Tanzania is to share and extend the understanding of natural environments and human communities thus enabling coexistence and effect positive change. Roots and Shoots works to engage and inspire youth and communities through their field expeditions, conservation clubs, community services and service learning methods.

Through this collaboration Terrawatu will facilitate the creation of Roots and Shoots clubs, projects focused on encouraging youth’s interest and capacity in maintaining the Tanzanian ecosystem, in the schools and villages that Terrawatu currently works in. The classroom component will utilize the technology and computer labs that Terrawatu has established to create a bridge between technology and education; projectors will be used to present the work and mission of Roots and Shoots while the internet will be promoted to further investigate the websites, work, and goals of both Terrawatu and Roots and Shoots.

In return Roots and Shoots will work with the women’s groups thatTerrawatu supports to provide them with technical assistance and trainings on sustainable forest management, tree nursery preparations, raising and management techniques, water catchments, species selection and medicinal plants.
This collaboration has come through the perseverance of staff on all sides, the respect of both organizations and a unity of our visions for Tanzania. We are proud to introduce Roots and Shoots as our most recent and active partner in development for Tanzanian culture, education, and wellbeing.

People-to-People Safaris Expand Options to Include Oldest Tribe in Tanzania

People-to-People Safaris (PPS), sponsored by Terrawatu, is a for-profit company established in 2006 to create unique adventure travel experiences in East Africa based on the years of experience of Terrawatu project staff. Profits go to support Terrawatu’s programs and projects.

Recently PPS has expanded their itinerary options to include Lake Eyasi to connect with the Hadzabe and Datoga tribes of Tanzania. Lake Eyasi is a mildly alkaline lake with a variety of monkeys, various birds, greater and lesser flamingos, storks and pelicans, and worth a detour in its own right. However the Hadzabe are one of Tanzania’s oldest surviving hunter-gatherer tribes. Their relatives include tribes from Namibia and the Pygmies—thought to be the beginning of human-kind as we know it. The Hadzabe still utilize the bow and arrow technique to hunt for animals to feed their cohort.

The arrows they employ are poisoned on the tip with the juices from a local plant and are strong enough to kill even an elephant while the bows are traditionally fashioned from giraffe tendon. These arrows are provided by the Datoga tribe, one of the smallest tribes in Tanzania with numbers dwindling by the season. They are metal workers by trade and sell the Hadzabe the arrows and metal pieces that they utilize in the hunt. More recently they have come to take up the American market of commercialism and are making rings and bracelets that passing visitors may purchase for a nominal amount—however at the same time give the Datoga a further income and expose them to the global nature of our world.

The optional addition of Lake Eyasi includes participating in a hunting expedition with the Hadzabe, a visit to one of the Datoga boma’s, and a morning drive/walk around Lake Eyasi. Accommodations offered at the moment are a local camping site with basic amenities or a night stay at the luxury tented lodge run by friends of Terrawatu and close affiliates with the local Hadzabe cohort.

Customizing your own People-to-People Safari with Terrawatu gives you the chance to witness firsthand the wildlife, landscape and culture of the Tanzanian people. In addition to visiting famous wildlife parks, safari participants visit traditional health clinics, community schools and reforestation projects allowing you to see proactive solutions to the issues of poverty, unemployment and AIDS.

Maasai Women’s Bag Begins Production – Distribution to Follow

Nine women from the village of Mkonoo will begin training in a new small business development project of creating leather purses with their traditional Maasai beading to embellish the traditional milk satchel design. While funding is still being sought out to continuously support these women in this endeavor, training in leather work will begin in early January with a goal of distribution beginning in early February.

Terrawatu aims to create the Maasai Bag Project to become a fully self-sustainable project, given the women’s previous knowledge of leather work and beading. The training that we are providing is meant just to give the women an additional opportunity to perfect their techniques and learn some new skills that they may utilize in their home life, other marketing ideas, and to pass onto their children for their future handicrafts. The stitching we use on the bags is familiar to them and therefore helping them to improve on this will improve the longevity of their bomas and the design of the leather bags used to carry milk and cow products. Furthermore, we are able to offer them another means to an income, requested international exposure and the ability to support their own children to global access and communication.

We plan to have the bags ready by early February and will send out a separate update to provide more information on the materials used, identifying information on the women involved, and prices request for these products.

What you need for each cup:

- ½ shot of Amarula
- ½ shot Frangelico
- freshly brewed good coffee
- fresh whipped cream and finely chopped nuts (optional)

What to do:

- Pour Amarula and Frangelico into glass coffee mug.
- Fill glass mug with hot coffee.
- Top with whipped cream and sprinkle with nuts if you so desire.

Wishing all of You and Your Family and Friends a Glorious Holiday Season. We Thank All of You for your Continued Support and Blessings.
